P. locomotives.

Interesting Letter Regarding Congress

Expenditures of all kinds by these great interests were in consequence curtailed, which came to be developed a pretty general loss of confidence impairing the general credit.

The mass of the people were in this state of uncertainty and tension when the failure of a week concern precipitated a panic, which would not have occurred during what was one of the most prosperous years of our history had not the credit of nearly all enterprises been weakened.

The loss of public confidence has led to that hoarding of money which still further aggravated the difficulty.

Without the prompt and vigorous action of J. P. Morgan and his associates, to whom later the secretary of the treasury loaned his aid, the disaster would have been appalling. As it is, the people have had time to see that they themselves, through a withdrawal of confidence in fundamentally sound institutions and enterprises, are for the most part to blame for the present situation, and that a renewal of the old confidence is all that is needed to bring about the old condition of prosperity.

The crisis is now well passed, and time will bring further relief.

By many members of congress it is held that some kind of legislation is necessary to give us a more flexible currency, and it is certain that such legislation will be discussed in both houses.

But the ideas as to what is needed are so varied and are held with such tenacity that it will be a difficult matter to agree upon any plan. But there can be no doubt that the discussion will be servicable to the country at large. It is almost too much to expect that a bill of the character indicated will be speedily passed.

The other great question—the nomination of a candidate for president—is being debated very earnestly in all quarters, and everywhere is heard the question, "Is Roosevelt a candidate?" thus apparently justifying Justice Brewer's famed reference to a game of hide and seek in which the President takes a part.

There are aspirants enough, but the problem is to pick the winner. It is regarded as certain that the bold action of Senator Foraker will weaken the chance of Secretary Taft, who it is now thought, may not get the unanimous support of his own state.

Senator Foraker may be relied upon to wage as vigorous a war as even a strenuous opponent may desire, and as there depends on the outcome far more than his nomination as president or his return to the senate, the contest in Ohio will be intensely watched by all who realize what has been the drift of affairs.

The booms of Vice President Fairbanks and Speaker Cannon are extremely healthy, though how they will develop is what the most experienced politician can not tell. That there will be other booms launched is very likely and it is regarded as quite certain that Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou will be put forward at some stage of the game. But the mention of the names of cabinet officers for the high position is hardly taken seriously by those who consider themselves wise on politics, for they simply believe that any cabinet name means only the president.

However, the situation may perhaps clear up as time elapses, so that there may be a clearer idea of "who's who" in the somewhat exclusive society composed of presidential candidates.

The president's message at the assembling of Congress contained nothing very startling outside of the very remarkable recommendation that congress shall make appropriations for the campaign expenses of the great political parties during presidential years. This is looked upon as an entirely new departure in the art of self government.

The excellence of the work of the department of agriculture is being more and more appreciated, particularly in California, and those of our people who are interested in the productions of the state are realizing more and more fully its importance. The bureau of soils has been actively engaged in its particular line of work on the Pacific coast, and the facts discovered and suggestions based thereon have been of very great value to all producers. Commercial and agricultural organizations are alive to the bearing of these investigations on the prosperity of California, and are on the watch for new directions in which the energy of the bureau of soils may be directed.

The Stockton chamber of commerce has been specially impressed with the promptness and efficiency of the work of the bureau in that part of the San Joaquin valley, and has thought itself more than justified in suggesting that the appropriations for this service be increased so the scope of the work may be enlarged. It has therefore prepared and sent to Washington a memorial to congress asking that a more liberal allowance be granted to the department of agriculture, and, particularly, to the bureau of soils. This will be presented to the senate by Senator Perkins, who will ask that it be referred to the committee on agriculture, and will endeavor to secure an increase in the appropriation for the purposes mentioned.

The pinch of the existing money stringency is felt in the most unexpected places. Apparently no class of people is exempt. Communication to members of the delegation from different parts of California show that the holders of mining claims are not exempt, and they are now asking for relief. The Los Angeles chamber of mines has forwarded to Senator Perkins resolutions suggesting congressional action, waiving during the year 1907 and 1908 the provisions of the mining laws requiring the performance of assessment work on all mining claims.

This seems to be necessary, as the impossibility of raising money to prosecute the prescribed work will in many instances lay claims open to "jumpers" who would thus steal the results of the labor of the original locators.

During previous periods of stringency action of this kind was taken, and there is little doubt that congress will now take similar action. A well-known firm of lawyers in San Francisco, thoroughly conversant with the needs of our mining population, has prepared a bill covering this point, and has submitted it to Senator Perkins, who has introduced it in the Senate, and will work for its passage.

The growing coastwise commerce of California, particularly of the ports north of San Francisco, demands many improvements to navigation, which the California delegation will urge during the present session. The Ferndale chamber of commerce is early in the field with a request that a canal be constructed to connect the Eel river valley with Humboldt bay. It would apparently cost comparatively little to cut a canal from the Eel river across the marsh land to Humboldt bay, and the chamber asks that an appropriation for a survey be made by congress. Congressman Engbright has the matter in hand,
