A FARMER GIVES FIGURES ON ROADS

"Every farmer who don't give some time, thought and work to the improvement of wagon-roads is surely standing in his own light. Bad roads are one of the causes of the cost of living that we are always harping about. We farmers still drag our produce to market over bad roads at the same old cost of forty years ago while the storekeeper, the factory-man and every one else are making every improvement they can to reduce the cost of hauling."

In these words, a plain California farmer, concluded his story of his conversion to the "good roads" agitation.

"With prices sky-high," said Hawkins in his characteristic style, "I started to town one day along in the worst part of the last rainy season with a bunch of hogs, a tub of butter and a case of eggs. The whole outfit weighed only 1,500 pounds, which was all I could haul on account of the bad roads. If the roads had been hard and level I could have pulled a ton and a half just as well as not with no more expense to myself than for half the load. Figuring the ten-mile haul, which took me the best part of the working day, at $3.50 for the team, wagon and driver, I found that it was costing me about 46 cents a ton for every mile I hauled the 1,500 pounds of live stock and produce I was going to trade in town. I never figured on the cost of hauling to town before and I tell you I was some surprised at what I found out."

"Naturally I got to figuring that if a railroad charged 46 cents for hauling a ton of stuff one mile I couldn't afford to eat anything but hay."

"I hadn't done figuring when I reached town, so when I had unloaded my hogs, butter and eggs and finished trading I walked to the railroad station and got to talking with the station agent about the cost of hauling. I told him how much it had cost me to drag my farm products into town and then switched him around to what the railroad charged for hauling. He pulled down off the shelf the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission and showed me, over the signatures of all the men who regulate the railroads, a statement that the average rate paid to a railroad for hauling a ton of stuff one mile was only three-quarters of a cent."

"When I set these figures alongside of the forty-six cents a ton it had cost me to haul those hogs, butter and eggs over every one of the ten miles of old, muddy dirt roads I began to think that we farmers are furnishing more than our share of the high cost of living that we complain so much about in a political campaign. I saw it plain when I thought of the things we have to buy in town and made out that we are paying for just such waste as I had piled up for fellows who ate my hogs, butter and eggs at the other end of the line."

"On the other hand I figured that with improved wagon-roads, such as I've read about in the papers from my old State of Pennsylvania, I could have hauled three tons instead of just one-quarter that much and saved for an extra profit margin on that one load about $2.62. I guess that goes long way toward proving that if I lived on a good, hard wagon-road I could undersell the farmer who didn't. You see the farmer is a producer and all of his costs have to be taken care of before the jobber or storekeeper can begin to pile up their costs."

"The station agent figured out for me that the railroad would have charged less than six cents for hauling the 1,500 pounds of hogs, butter and eggs the whole ten miles. That brought home the fact that the railroad company would have hauled my wagonload over 583 miles for the $3.50 it had cost me to haul it ten miles into town."

"In trying to make out how the railroad could haul so cheap the agent told me the railroad company had done it by bringing farmers just like me to work the land along their line. The more that came, he said, the lower the rate that could be charged because the larger the business between samll towns the better equipment that could be furnished to haul the goods faster and with less expense."

"After I had figured all this out so I understood it the agent gave me the rates on some of the goods I had bought in town and then I went over to the store-keeper who is always complaining about high railroad rates when I ask him why I have to pay so much more for food and clothes than I used to. He told me the same thing again and I told him I didn't want to hear any more of that argument because I had been looking into these things on my own hook. Then I figured out to him the rates he had to pay the railroads on some of the goods I had bought and showed him that it didn't amount to more than half a cent on the dollar. He looked pretty queer when I got through. Finally in order to squirm out of the hole I had pushed him into he said the railroads didn't have so much to do with the cost of grub and clothes but it had to be laid onto something and railroads were the easiest because not very many people knew anything about railroad rates and the rest didn't care to find out."

"I guess I used up considerable time that evening but I'm glad of it because I'm convinced that we farmers along with a whole lot of other people have been setting up scarecrows just to knock them down. I calculate we could do a whole lot more by chopping down our costs—mainly that of hauling—by good roads than harping all the time about railroad rates. Digging at the railroads isn't going to cut more than a couple of cents off a barrel of potatoes or a suit of Sunday clothes because they don't get much more than that for hauling them clean across the country, and I guess the railroads are not in business for their health any more than we are."

Women's Secrets

There is one man in the United States who has perhaps heard more women's secrets than any other man or woman in the country. These secrets are not secrets of guilt or shame, but the secrets of suffering, and they have been confided to Dr. R. V. Pierce in the hope and expectation of advice and help. That few of these women have been disappointed in their expectations is proved by the fact that ninety-eight per cent. of all women treated by Dr. Pierce have been absolutely and altogether cured. Such a record would be remarkable if the cases treated were numbered by hundreds only. But when that record applies to the treatment of more than half-a-million women, in a practice of over 40 years, it is phenomenal, and entitles Dr. Pierce to the gratitude accorded him by women, as the first of specialists in the treatment of women's diseases.

Every sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, absolutely without charge. All replies are mailed, sealed in perfectly plain envelopes, without any printing or advertising whatever, upon them. Write without fear as without fee, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.
