Her Shrimp Salad.

A very young and very inexperienced matron, a well known society woman of New York, recently undertook to assume the entire management, even to the smallest detail, of her household affairs, and her directions to the servants are conveyed to them in writing. A few days ago, wishing to have some dainty dish for luncheon, she thought a nice shrimp salad would be the thing and accordingly wrote her instructions to the cook to prepare the salad and for the purpose to order from the marketman "one small shrimp." The story leaked out, and it will be many days before she will be able to look into the eyes of any of her friends without seeing the small shrimp twinkling therein.—New York Times.

A Bluff Sign.

"Watchman In This Building." This is the new sign that is appearing on uptown apartment houses in New York as a warning to tramps, beggars and peddlers.

"It's a great scheme," said a real estate man. "Warnings to keep out are of no value, and watchmen are expensive, but the signs cost only a trifle, and they work pretty well, just as 'Beware of the Dog' signs in the country."

"This bluff is better than a watchman, because you don't have to keep an eye on it, and you do have to keep both eyes on the average watchman."—New York Times.

A Pingpong Blunder.

"I guess that New York man who dropped dead while playing pingpong was a good deal to blame himself."

"What makes you think so?" "Why, as near as I can make out, he was trying to return a ball by a short arm quick counter with the right forearm reversed for a backward back handed stroke. Wouldn't that jar your arteries?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

The Boy Who Had Seven Hats and Couldn't Find One to Wear.
Harry Willis had six hats. There was his best hat, a round cloth hat with a turned up brim; a striped bicycle cap, two polo caps, a cloth cap with a peak and a straw hat. Yes, he had a sailor hat besides. That makes seven. But for all that he was the most hatless boy I ever heard of. Every time he went out he had a terrible time hunting for a hat to wear.
One day everybody was ready to go driving—everybody except Harry. He was looking for a hat. Papa called that if Harry didn't come soon he'd go without him. Mamma was just getting into the carriage, but she turned back.
"What's the trouble, Harry?" she said.
"I can't find my hat," replied Harry. "Somebody always takes it away and hides it."
"Where did you put the last one you wore?"
"Well, I don't know," said Harry, looking perplexed. "I think on the hall table or on the sofa in the sitting room or perhaps on the bookcase or in the dining room or perhaps—"
"The other day when you came in I saw you throw your hat across the sitting room, and it flew behind the sofa," said Bridget.
"It isn't any such—I mean you must be mistaken, Bridget. Now, that's my last hat. Somebody has hidden them all. I haven't seen my sailor hat for a week nor the peaked cap either. I lost my best hat last Sunday and my bicycle cap three days ago. I had my straw hat yesterday morning, and I haven't seen it since. And that's the second polo cap I've lost today. It's just too bad. Somebody hides them on purpose."
"Suppose you look behind the sofa, Harry," suggested mamma. "I must go. Papa won't wait any longer."
"It isn't there, I know." But Harry ran in to see. He pulled out the sofa with a desperate tug and looked behind it.
What do you think he found?
In a heap in the corner lay a straw hat and a sailor hat, a best hat with a turned up brim, a striped bicycle cap, two polo caps and a cloth cap with a peak.
Did you ever hear of such a boy?

A Snubbed Cub Reporter.

Professor Richard Lynch Garner's return from Africa, where he has been for the third time to study the language and habits of the monkey tribes, calls to mind a little incident in which he unknowingly figured. The professor had just returned from a previous trip and upon reaching the United States went at once to Chicago, where he is connected with the Chicago university. The daily papers were anxious to get interviews with him in regard to his study of the language of monkeys. The city editor of the Chicago News sent a young reporter on the assignment and had forgotten about him in the work of the day when the enthusiastic young man rushed into the office and exclaimed:
"Well, I've seen Garner, the man who says he can understand monkeys."
"Then," replied the editor, "I suppose you had no difficulty in making yourself understood."
Up Against It.
Stanley, the office boy, made his appearance in the art department the other day wearing a Christian Endeavor button in the lapel of his coat.
"I'm glad to see you have decided to lead a moral and upright life in the future," remarked the cartoonist, fixing his gaze on the emblem.
"Aw, bat 'em out!" replied Stanley. "Dis is collateral fer a loan. See? An' I'm up against it at dat. I lends a feller 80 cents, an' I says, 'Gimme somethin' fer security.' Well, he flashes dis here pin on me, an' like an easy mark, I takes it. Dere ain't no moral an' upright life about dis here deal."
"Well, the button is worth 80 cents, isn't it?" asked the cartoonist.
"Naw," replied Stanley in disgust. "I tought it was when I took it, but I found out since youse kin buy 'em fer a quarter."—Philadelphia Record.
